En cette fin de soirée d'août, une agréable fraîcheur prend sa revanche sur le soleil qui, toute la journée, a frappé Londres sans ménagement. Dans Kensington Gardens, du haut de son piédestal de bronze, même Peter Pan semble se réjouir de l'arrivée de la nuit.

Non loin de là, sur Bayswater Road, les membres de la Diplomats of London Society se quittent après avoir célébré l'arrivée en poste de leur nouveau confrère allemand.

Donnerwetter ! Foilà une soirée d'accueil que je ne suis pas près d'oublier !

Je n'ai pas fu le temps passer ! Je fais encore me faire... me faire... Ach ! Comment dites-fous ?...

"Se faire sonner les cloches", cher Hans.

Mon pauvre ami ! L'autorité allemande pourtant si renommée serait-elle tombée si bas ?

Vous poufez ironiser, très chers ! On fait que vous ne connaissez pas ma femme. Je fais couper par le parc. Je serai plus fite rentré.

Par le parc ? À cette heure ?

Ce n'est pas très prudent. Vous n'avez donc pas entendu parler de ces bandes de voyous qui rôdent par ici la nuit...?

Was ? Fous foulez parler de ces... de ces... Ach ! Comment les appelle-t-on, déjà ? J'ai vraiment trop bu, mes amis...

On les appelle les "Teddys". Des voyous désœuvrés qui ne respectent rien ni personne. Vous devriez vous méfier.

Dff ! Ce ne sont pas quelques kalopins déguisés en filles qui me feront plus peur que ma femme ! Qu'ils y fiennent !

Si je vous ai réunis, Gentlemen, c'est parce que l'affaire devient plus grave que nous le pensions.

David, pourriez-vous enquêter discrètement sur la comtesse Abigail de Cheachire ? Je voudrais savoir qui est la personne derrière l'épouse du comte...

Par ailleurs, avez-vous déjà obtenu la copie du testament de Lord Lupus Sandfield et le rapport sur sa descendance que je vous avais demandés ?

Les voici, Capitaine.
